

IDLA in the national spotlight!

In its efforts to focus national attention on online learning, a camera crew from the George Lucas Foundation's "Edutopia" flew to the Gem State in April and put Idaho Digital Learning in the spotlight.

Through Edutopia, the George Lucas Foundation "spread[s] the word about ideal, interactive learning environments and enables others to adapt these successes locally. "

After a scouting trip in March, the producers decided to profile IDLA students, site coordinators and administrators at Centerpoint High School in Caldwell and Notus High School in Notus.

"The diverse and innovative media resources available from The George Lucas Foundation are designed to connect and inspire positive change in all areas of education," said George Lucas, creator of Star Wars and Indiana Jones.

Look for specific coverage on Idaho Digital Learning coming up this summer online and on the air, through the following venues:

- Edutopia.org: An in-depth and interactive resource, Edutopia.org offers practical, hands-on advice, real-world examples, lively contributions from practitioners, and invaluable tips and tools.
- Edutopia video: Through an extensive offering of documentaries, Edutopia video is a catalyst for innovation by helping educators and parents, as well as business and community leaders, see and understand pioneering best practices.
<http://www.edutopia.org/>